

Lenin's mummy and the fraud of the October Revolution

www.pogonowski.com

The tragedy of Russian history is that the bloodless revolution in March 8-12, 1917 which caused on March 15, 1917 the abdication of that Tsar Nicholas II (1868-17 July 1918) and ended the rule of the Romanov's Dynasty produced a weakened Russia and gave opportunity to Berlin to use paid agents to stage a political takeover of the government in St. Petersburg and secure the withdrawal of Russia from the war, as well as the short-lasting submission of Russia to the status of a vassal of the German Empire.

A strange reminder of these events is located in a place of honor in a mausoleum which is located outside of the fortified wall of the Kremlin and serves as the viewing platform for Russian dignitaries reviewing parades of their military might. A unique in the world the mummy-icon of Vladimir Lenin is located there and it is annually groomed for good looks.

It is a strange ritual that honors a fearful man, who had contempt for working men. He was absent from Russia for 17 years, before the Bolshevik take-over. He became a mummy-icon. Why is he there in violation of his own expressed wishes to be buried in St. Petersburg next to his mother?

The mummified body of Lenin in the Red Square is a product of a Byzantine tradition of reverence for icons cynically adapted to Soviet politics. Ironically it commemorates the career of a paid German agent, recruited in Switzerland to enable the redeployment of German forces from Russia to France during WWI. The first incontrovertible evidence for Lenin being paid by the government of Germany is documented and discussed in detail in the book "Unknown Lenin" by Richard Pipes, published in June 1999, ISBN- 0300076622.

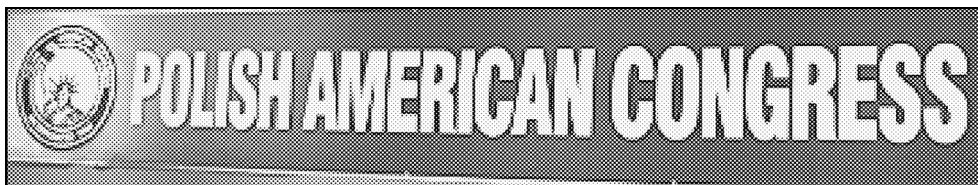

According to professor Richard Pipes, Ulyanov's family descended from Moldavians, nomadic Ugro-Finish Chuvashes, Volga Germans, Swedes, and possibly Jews but not Slavs. By a strange turn of history the American entry into WWI precipitated a chain of events that eventually caused Lenin's body to be mummified and displayed to the public as a unique mummy-icon in the world.

It is a fact that in order to face American forces in France, the Germans needed to shift the bulk of their forces from the Russian front west. In the long run a very risky German decision to take advantage of the revolution in Russia made possible the extraordinary political career of Vladimir Lenin, an obscure refugee in Switzerland virtually unknown to the Russian public.

Lenin was recruited as a German agent to facilitate the liquidation of the Russian front and was given virtually unlimited German money, to convert a clique of conspirators into Russian revolutionary power by bribery and by hiring criminal gangs to execute, with the help of Leon Trotsky (1879-1940), a sudden Bolshevik takeover of the government in St. Petersburg on October 17, 1917.

During Lenin's exile in Switzerland with his health problems caused by syphilis his political career benefited enormously when an arms dealer, Aleksander Hephhand, who recommended Lenin to the Germans to be an agent in a scheme to bring about the surrender of Russia plunged into civil war and terror as is described in detail in the book: "The Merchant of Revolution" by Z. A. Zeman and W. B. Scharlau.

An American threat to German forces in France caused the Germans to postpone the plans for a quick expansion of the German Empire by subduing Russia the way Britain once subdued India, as described by Aleksander Guchkov,

Dear Prof. Porter:

It has been more than three months since the October 29, 2009 Annual Lecture (AOL). We are still receiving complaints in our office at the Polish American Congress Michigan Division from people who are angry. Those who have attended the lecture or others who heard about Ms. Magdalena Sroda's negative, bordering on slanderous, "information" about Poland and the Polish nation.

Polish American Congress Michigan Division shares the opinions of those protesting against these theories expounded by Ms. Sroda. It is indeed disheartening that a person born and educated in Poland and now living in a free country can determinedly describe Poland as though it was a medieval third world country.

Propagating falsehoods about the Polish nation not only defames Poland but also denies your students access to a balanced understanding they should expect in your fine university. It's our opinion that such one-sided presentation does not serve a purpose in our democracy.

We realize that students should be informed about the evolution of intellectual thinking nevertheless, all societies change in a democratic society.

The educational environment, ought to be presented from various points of view. ACL's method of presenting only one point of view, especially by a known radical extremist, appears to be "brainwashing", an exercise your fine University can ill afford. We suggest having another speaker who can present an objective perspective. We would be willing to help you find such a person.

We would like to remind you that people objecting to this type of one-sidedness include past financial supporters of the Copernicus Lecture Fund, U of M alumni, and parents of U of M students.

defense minister in Kerensky's government. The new plans called for elimination of the Eastern Front by crucial German support for revolution in Russia and gave Lenin his chance of a lifetime to become an important figure in history. The proposal is described in the Journal of the German Foreign Ministry on March 9, 1917, after it was first proposed on March 9, 1915, by Aleksander Hephhand, who eventually obtained "unlimited German money" for takeover of the Russian government by a clique of conspirators.

On July 18, 1917 Lenin was accused by the Russian Ministry of Justice under Prime Minister A. F. Kerensky (1881-1970) and was declared guilty of high treason. Evidence was produced in court that Bolsheviks received huge amounts of money from the German Government. Hephhand was exposed as a German agent, in a treasonable cooperation between Bolsheviks and the German Government. The total expenditure of the German treasury, is estimated to be about ten tons of gold. Lenin, while crossing German territory, had with him on board his train some ten million dollars in gold, thanks to German chief banker Max Warburg, whose brother Paul strangely enough, in 1913, was the chief architect of the Federal Reserve System, the central bank of the United States.

Leon Trotsky with an American passport and large amount of money (about 20,000,000 dollars in gold in his hand), departed New York on board of the ship SS. Kristianiafiord, on March 27, 1917 together with 275 Jewish revolutionaries. They were detained in Halifax, Nova Scotia, by the Canadians, who logically thought, that Trotsky might help to stage a revolution in Russia, which would allow a diversion of a large number of German soldiers to the Western Front and cause more Canadian soldiers to be killed there.

Obviously the bankers who supported the Bolshevik takeover were not afraid of the proletarian slogans demanding confiscation of their money, because these bankers controlled Lenin's government - a government that had paid back the bank Kuhn and Loeb 100,000,000 dollars during 1918-1922 according to "Tsardom and the Revolution" by Russian general Arsene de Goulevich.

After five days of detention, Trotsky and company were released upon intervention of Sir William Wiseman, partner of the Kuhn and Loeb financial firm, and they continued their voyage to St. Petersburg, where they met Lenin in April 1917 in the Russian capital, then in a state of anarchy.
