

Henry Makow - Katyn from 8

taken out in barges on the White Sea and drowned.

Otherwise, the diary describes how the Soviets tried to indoctrinate and intimidate the Poles into betraying their culture and their country, by forming a puppet class in a future Soviet-dominated Poland. The Poles refused and that is the reason they were slaughtered.

The Zaitzev Diary

When Zaitzev got his assignment, he was warned that the Poles were all "educated religious fanatics" always singing patriotic songs and hymns with their chaplain. Zaitzev was confident he could teach them to "pray to a new God."

The prisoners worked cutting trees from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. In the evening they boycotted the indoctrination sessions. They had no desire to assist in building the future Soviet Poland.

One officer explained: "As a Pole I know my nation. None of us have the desire to dictate to other people, and we don't want other people to dictate to us. We are neither a Fascist or a Communist nation, but a devoutly Catholic one."

Once during a speech, the Polish Army Chaplain Jozwiak lifted up the crucifix he wore and began to chant a prayer. The prisoners followed suit. That night, Jozwiak was taken to the Interrogation Chamber.

"The use of electrical currents on Father Jozwiak's eyes and body didn't help. Nor was the Chinese method successful, where the prisoner was stripped from the waist down and forced to sit over an open cage of starving rats. We couldn't allow the priest to go back to the other prisoners in the condition he was left in, so we finished him off." (Shainberg, p. 165)

The NKVD thought the priest's example would have a sobering effect on the POW's but instead they curtailed their work. The NKVD retaliated by decreasing rations which made the prisoners too weak to work. When the NKVD started shooting prisoners who didn't work; the others turned on the guards with their axes and 192 Poles were shot.

Now the Poles were more defiant than ever. When a collaborator lectured to them, they began to chant a prayer: "We Polish soldiers and prisoners of the Soviets have been brought here to foreign lands to die. We beg of you, Mother of God, to take care of our nation...Save us from German and Soviet imprisonment. We are offering ourselves as a sacrifice for the independence of our fatherland..."

Of course this is the kind of self sacrifice and patriotism that our Masters don't want us to see.

"Our task was impossible," Zaitzev wrote. "People who have never met these Poles will not understand how difficult it was to change their attitude toward us. No beating or abuse would make them stop their singing. They are a hard and proud people. Every day they get physically weaker but their anger and hatred increased."

Polish historian Krzysttof Siwek tells me that Poland has declared April 13 a National Day of Remembrance of the Katyn martyrs. "A joint Polish-Russian commission was formed to develop an official position of both sides. Most of controversies remain unresolved. Russians fear that admitting fully to the crime against humanity would allow the victims' families to demand compensations and other penalties as in the case of Germany."

(Henry Makow (born November 12, 1949 in Zürich, Switzerland) is a Canadian conspiracy theorist, author, columnist, and inventor of the boardgame Scruples.

As a baby, he moved with his family to Canada, settling in Ottawa. At the age of 11 he began to write the syndicated advice -to-parents column "Ask Henry," which ran in 50 newspapers in the early 1960s.

He received his Ph.D. in English Literature from the University of Toronto in 1982, and lives in Winnipeg.

Poland's Afghan Force from 7

1999 and the European Union in 2004, would review the Nato-led Afghan mission's effectiveness and might increase its force there by 400-600 troops. On Saturday he made clear the Afghan contingent would not be strengthened. "We can't afford (to send more troops to Afghanistan)," the daily Gazeta Wyborcza quoted Klich as saying.

Defence has the biggest budget among Poland's 17 government ministries and Klich has been under mounting pressure from Prime Minister Donald Tusk to cut costs.

Although Poland is expected to avoid recession this year, analysts forecast its economic growth will slow to 1.4 percent from 4.8 per cent in 2008, making it difficult to achieve its ambitious plan of cutting the budget deficit from last year's level. □ is alleged of organising the unlawful arrest of, and aiding investigation and trial against, Poland's wartime hero general Emil August Fieldorf, a legendary commander of the Polish underground Polish Home Army during WW II. Emil August Fieldorf was executed on February 24, 1953. Communist authorities concluded already in a 1956 report that Wolińska had violated the rule of law by her involvement in biased investigations and trials that frequently resulted in executions.

Wolińska was born in a Polish Jewish family in Warsaw.

Wolińska was married to Franciszek Józwiak, the commander of the Gwardia Ludowa and the first commandant of the communist state police Milicja Obywatelska in Poland. Her first husband, Włodzimierz Brus (born as Benjamin Zylberberg), was separated from her during the Holocaust, but they were reunited in 1944 and remarried in 1956. He was a marxist economist and member of the governing political party in communist-ruled Poland Polish United Workers' Party until 1968.

Wolińska left Poland in 1968 after Polish 1968 political crisis and spent the rest of her life in the United Kingdom. Her husband, Włodzimierz Brus was a professor of economics at Oxford University (he died in 2007). Wolińska lived in Oxford and had British citizenship.

Helena Wolińska-Brus died on the 26th of November 2008 in Oxford.

Two applications for Wolińska-Brus' extradition had been made by Poland (specifically, by the National Remembrance Institute and the Polish Prosecutors related to the case) in 1999 and 2001, both of which the British Home Office refused on humanitarian grounds; in particular her advanced age and the 50 years since the alleged crimes occurred.

In an interview with The Sunday Telegraph, Wolińska said she would not return to "the country of Auschwitz and Birkenau", claiming she would not receive fair trial in Poland. Despite her involvement in Stalinist-era crimes she called to forget that period in her life and, in her own words, "not to disrupt her with this silly prosecution". The Polish media and government in turn criticized the inefficiency of the international extradition process.

In 2006 Polish president Lech Kaczyński revoked the Polonia Restituta decoration that Wolińska had received in 1954. In 2004, Poland joined the European Union, allowing access to the European extradition procedures. In 2007 the Commission for Investigating Crimes against the Polish Nation asked Polish prosecutors to issue a European Arrest Warrant (EAW) against Wolińska, which was duly issued on November 20, 2007; this was the third attempt at her extradition. □ the items you purchased recently were manufactured. You will find that information clearly listed on tags and packaging material.

The dismantling of American industries did not happen in just a few years, it has been taking place for a long time. Now it's very clear that when manufacturing jobs are gone so are the management, sales and others jobs that make a business thrive. I'm encouraging you to react now so we can retain the businesses and employers we have, so we can sell what we make at a competitive price and expand business and employment opportunities here in the U.S.A.

There is no doubt the world's economy has changed and we have to change with it, but you the consumer can make a major difference every time you enter a store when you make it known that you're shopping for American Made Products. In some cases, you will be surprised by the reaction of the business owner or sales people as they say, "Why does it matter where the items are made as long as they are available when you want them." Others will tell you they have fewer and fewer products made in America available to them and in order to stay in business they have to sell what they can get from their suppliers. How long can this continue? The next time you go shopping for clothing, ask the sales person to show you the selection they have available of both American made and imported items. I guarantee you it will be an eye opener.

If you speak up, businesses will get the idea that Americans are concerned about the well-being of their fellow American workers who want quality products produced by American workers in competition with imported items in their stores.

We also have to consider that it is the American people that pay local, state and federal taxes which maintain all levels of government and community services. Businesses located abroad don't pay those taxes. They are not concerned about the communities where we live, the schools our children attend or the future well-being of America's economy. We have many quality jobs presently available to Americans, the goal is to keep them and expand the availability of quality and long-lasting employment. As I stated in my last commentary, it is not government's role to start businesses, that's up to the private sector, but government can help businesses prosper by providing tax incentives which will help make production cost more reasonable and bring about additional employment opportunities.

This week as you go shopping, look for, ask for and purchase American made products. If we don't, employment opportunities will continue to dwindle and your well-being and the well-being of your family, friends and neighbors will continue to be affected.

This is Michael Blichasz, and as always, I appreciate hearing from you, and I welcome your comments and suggestions. Email me at:
